The garment: A black dress with white trim around the middle section made of mostly polyester blended with spandex. The care label states: dry clean only with any solvent except trichloroethylene with no International Code Symbols.

The problem: During proper professional drycleaning, as labeled, the black fabric dye bleeds, resulting in transfer of black color onto the white waistband trim fabric.

Whos responsible? The manufacturer since the black base fabric was not able to withstand professional drycleaning without bleeding, fading and adverse dye migration.

What to do: This dress should be returned to the retailer or manufacturer.

The black fabric used for this dress could not withstand drycleaning without dye migration.

After proper professional drycleaning, the black dye transfer into the white areas and causes the white to now appear gray.
